

Every winter around 100 million tourists visit the Alps. This is almost the same number as the combined population of Britain and France.

When we talk about environmental problems we usually think of Africa, South East Asia and other faraway places. However, many similar problems are often to be found right on our own doorsteps! What do you think the French artist Sempé is trying to tell us? Do you have any suggestions for developing mountain areas so that holiday facilities can be provided while also preserving the natural environment?
