Owners were asked to create a mental picture of a vicious, snarling attack dog. Amazingly, 67% of the cats immediately became highly excited and started arching their backs and hissing.

CASE REPORT #3: A double-blind study in a West Germany sleep lab produced even more astonishing results that confirmed the amazing psychic bond between humans and pets—even when we're asleep.

Thirty-one dogs and their owners were hooked up to sensitive equipment that measures brain wave activity.

The doctors were stunned by what they found. People and their pets actually SHARE dreams!

At precisely the time the human volunteers entered the REM (rapid eye movement) phase of sleep that indicates dreaming, the dogs did, too.

The effect was so striking the researchers thought their equipment had malfunctioned. So the experiment was repeated.

"There was no mistake," says Dr Bruce Kamalay who conducted the experiment. "Clearly there was a psychic link between the owners and their pets. Now we're planning to set up new tests to analyse the dogs' dreams. We want to know if they're the same as those of their owners."

Canadian veterinarian, Dr Corbin LaFitte said he's not surprised by the new findings.

"Only last year," he explained, "a scientific paper was published in the British medical journal, Lancet, describing the case of a dog that had detected skin cancer in a woman's leg—before it was even visible to the human eye."

...on the same wave length.

...ington, woman is about to have a seizure, Harley starts barking wildly.

...t's just amazing," she said. "He's barked out warnings from several yards away. ...and he's 100% accurate.

Whenever he starts barking in that special way, I settle myself into a safe position where I won't be hurt when the worse occurs."
