statistics mentioning how much of each pound spent goes to the animals, but carefully omitting any reference to what happens to the pounds UNspent! IFAW does not seem to have charity status in the U.K. at least, for there is no mention of it on any of their literature. If this is the case, then it is not obliged by law to spend its funds, as registered charities are. I suppose one could say that if at least some of the funds reach some of the animals, then we could be satisfied that something is being done! However, I know many people who would not be satisfied with such a dishonest situation, and I know many people in the U.K. who have become very suspicious of IFAW's activities since the false Japanese earthquake appeal information, and who have declared they will not support IFAW ever again! I will certainly not renew my IFAW membership, nor donate anything further. I am so sorry you are involved with such an organisation, Kyenan.

I will be returning the Korean animal photos and literature very soon. I asked the donors you sent copies of books to, to return them after they had finished looking through them. They could be put to better use in Korea - or perhaps the U.S. I think your photos are really excellent and wonder why IFAW is not using them. They should be put to good use for picture postcard campaigns before they become too dated. Your Korean campaign, though not necessarily directly connected to KAPS, should surely be ongoing - since the problem itself is. However, with the appeal value of the Japanese earthquake, the impending resumption of whaling and possibly of seal slaughter, too, you may have tough competition in keeping Korea to the forefront of IFAW's promotional priorities, but I certainly believe it should have equal importance with other crises.

I wish you all the very best, Kyenan - in both your personal and professional life. I am very worried about you now I have directly experienced IFAW's true nature. Please take care, and give my love to Sunan.

With love,
